BEFORE WE BEGIN

What I'm Seeing For You Right Now

Claire, your chart runs on a quiet engine that most people never notice about you. Jupiter rules your whole chart from the 8th house, the realm of deep bonds, shared resources, and what two people build when they merge lives. That single placement tells me your life was never meant to be lived on the surface. You go deep or you don't go at all.

The tightest, most defining aspect in your chart is the almost-exact trine and sextile between your Ascendant and your North Node in the roots-and-home sector, which means your growth and your sense of self move together rather than pulling apart.

And your Moon in Pisces sits in a lovely, close trine to Venus in Scorpio, giving you a heart that feels everything and loves with full intensity. These are the pieces I keep returning to. This pattern is being pressed on directly by the sky right now, in the exact areas you wrote to me about.

The current sky is busy with your love life, which is no accident given your questions. Venus, your relationship planet and the ruler of your partnership house, is moving in review through your 10th house, having paused and turned backward on October 3rd.

On October 10th Venus and Mars form an exact square, a brief flare of friction between wanting closeness and wanting independence. Pluto, sitting in your 1st house all season, stations and turns forward again on October 15th, which marks a slow release of pressure you've been carrying inside yourself.

Then on October 23rd the Sun meets Venus in a single concentrated day called a cazimi, falling in the same part of your chart, a reset point for how you value yourself and what you want from love. And across late October the Sun crosses your Midheaven zone, lighting up your public life and reputation.

You asked me three things: how to find your true soulmate, what kind of partner actually fits you for the long haul, and whether there are signs of money improving. I'll answer all three directly in the questions section, grounded in your actual placements. Here's how to read what follows.

The early parts describe who you are, your core self and how you love and fight for what you want. The questions section answers your three questions head-on. The current-sky section lays out the timing and what the next weeks and months hold.

Jupiter rules your chart from the 8th house, which is why surface-level connection has never been enough for you and never will be.

ACT ONE

Who You Are

Your Core Self

Your Sun sits at the middle of Sagittarius in the 12th house, the most private, interior room of the whole chart. This is a specific and slightly paradoxical combination. Sagittarius is the sign of the seeker, the one who wants meaning, truth, the bigger picture, adventure. But placed in the 12th house, that seeking happens inwardly, behind a curtain.

You are not the loud Sagittarian holding court at the party. Your fire burns on the inside, in your imagination, your faith, your private convictions about how life works. The Sun here has no traditional dignity, which in plain terms means its strength is earned rather than handed to you. You weren't born knowing your own worth. You've had to find it, repeatedly, in quiet.

That's not a flaw. It's the reason you have genuine depth where other people have only surface confidence. What drives you is the search for something that matters. You're wired for meaning before comfort. The one growth edge here is that the 12th-house Sun can hide.

You can spend so much time in your inner world that other people don't get to see the warm, generous, truth-telling person you actually are. That was a passing weather system, not a verdict on your life.

Your Inner World

Your Moon is at the very first degree of Pisces, in the 2nd house of money, security, and self-worth. This is a tender, absorptive Moon. Pisces feels the emotional temperature of every room. You pick up on moods, undercurrents, what people aren't saying. The placement in your security sector means your emotional stability and your material stability are deeply braided together.

When money feels shaky, your whole inner world feels shaky, and when you feel emotionally safe, you handle money with far more ease. The best thing in your emotional life is that your Moon makes an almost-exact trine to Venus, under a degree, one of the tightest and sweetest contacts in your chart. This is a gift.

It means your capacity to feel and your capacity to love flow together without friction. You give warmth easily. You attach with your whole heart. People feel cared for around you. The harder note is that your Moon squares Mercury, a close contact, which can make your feelings and your thoughts argue with each other.

You feel one thing and think another, and the two don't always agree. Under stress you can overthink an emotional situation until you've talked yourself out of trusting what you felt first. The remedy is simple to name and harder to live: your first emotional read is usually right. Trust the feeling before the analysis gets hold of it.

How Life Meets You

Sagittarius rises in your chart, at the very last degree, which gives you a warm, open, honest first impression. People meet you and sense that you're searching for something more than the ordinary. You come across as philosophical, a little restless, drawn to the big questions.

Because Sagittarius rises, Jupiter is your chart ruler, the single most important planet in your whole chart. And your Jupiter sits in Virgo in the 8th house. This is the engine driving your life. The 8th house is intimacy, merged resources, transformation, the deep end of the pool.

Jupiter here says that your biggest growth, your luck, and your expansion all come through deep bonds and shared ventures rather than solo effort. You grow through merging with others, financially and emotionally. Jupiter in Virgo wants that depth to be practical, useful, grounded in real care rather than drama.

Jupiter in Virgo is in its challenging sign, which means your growth planet works through detail, service, and humility rather than grand gestures. You don't expand by thinking big and bold. You expand by getting the details right, by being genuinely useful to the people and ventures you bond with.

Jupiter also makes a square to Mercury, so there's a lifelong tension between your big-picture faith and your tendency to pick everything apart analytically. Learning to let the faith lead, and the analysis follow, is a core thread of your life.

The Blend

Here's where your Big Three agree and where they pull against each other. Your Sun, Moon, and Rising are all deeply feeling, inward, meaning-seeking. Sagittarius Sun and Rising both want truth and depth; Pisces Moon wants emotional union. The whole chart leans toward the profound end of experience. Where they contradict is pace and visibility.

Sagittarius wants to reach out, explore, connect widely; the 12th-house Sun and Pisces Moon want to retreat, protect, go inward. You can feel pulled between wanting to be seen and wanting to hide, between reaching for people and pulling back to safety. In real life this shows up exactly where you're feeling it: in love.

Part of you wants to throw the doors open and find your person. Another part retreats the moment things get real, because the 8th-house, 12th-house, Pisces architecture of your chart feels everything so intensely that closeness can feel like too much. That's not bad luck. That's the push-pull you were born to work with.

Your Moon and Venus in near-exact trine give you a heart built for deep love. The work is letting someone all the way in before the retreat instinct takes over.

ACT TWO

How Your Life Works

How You Think and Communicate

Your Mercury sits early in Sagittarius in the 11th house of friendships, networks, and hopes for the future. Mercury in Sagittarius thinks big. You're a conceptual thinker, drawn to meaning and the overall shape of things rather than fine print. You grasp the gist quickly and get impatient with tedious detail.

In the 11th house, your mind comes alive around people, groups, and ideas about the future. You think out loud with friends. Your best insights often arrive in conversation. Mercury here is in its challenging sign and sits close to the Sun, which means your thinking is strongly colored by your identity and your faith. You don't think neutrally; you think from conviction.

This gives you a persuasive, warm, visionary quality in how you talk, though it can also mean you sometimes decide first and reason second. The three contacts that shape your mind most are the sextile to Mars, the trine to Saturn, and the square to Jupiter. The Mars sextile, a tight one, gives your thinking drive and directness; you can turn an idea into action.

The Saturn trine gives you more mental discipline and structure than you give yourself credit for. The Jupiter square is the one to watch: your big-picture faith and your analytical mind genuinely argue with each other, and this can tip you into overthinking or into talking yourself out of a good instinct. The Moon-Mercury square I mentioned earlier plays out here too.

When you're stressed, your head and your heart disagree, and you end up second-guessing. You learn best through meaning and story, not rote repetition. You make decisions best when you let yourself feel into them first and only then bring the analysis. One practical move: when a decision matters, write down your first gut answer before you let yourself analyze.

Your Pisces Moon's first read is usually the wise one, and your Sagittarius-Virgo mental machinery can talk you out of it. Keep the gut answer visible while you think.

How You Love

Venus is the key to your whole love life, so I want to sit with it. Your Venus is at the very first degree of Scorpio in the 10th house. Venus in Scorpio loves with intensity, loyalty, and a need for total honesty. You don't do casual. When you love, you love all the way down, and you want the same in return. Surface attraction bores you.

You want to know someone's depths and be known in yours. Venus in Scorpio is in its challenging sign, which simply means love doesn't come to you easy and breezy; it comes deep, serious, and sometimes complicated, and that intensity is both your gift and your pattern. The crown jewel of your chart is that Venus makes an almost-exact trine to your Moon, under a degree.

This is one of the loveliest contacts a person can have. Your heart and your capacity for love are in harmony. You give affection naturally. You're emotionally generous. When you feel safe, you are a deeply warm and devoted partner. But Venus also squares Mars, a wider contact, and this is where the pattern lives.

Venus wants closeness, merging, loyalty; Mars wants independence, pursuit, freedom. The square means these two desires inside you don't automatically cooperate. You can be drawn to people who activate that very tension, partners who are a little unavailable, a little hot-and-cold, because the friction feels like passion. It isn't. It's the Venus-Mars square projected outward.

Real love for you will feel steadier than that, and at first the steadiness might even feel unfamiliar. Venus in the 10th house also means your worth and your love life are tangled up with how visible and accomplished you feel. You want a partner who respects what you do and who you are in the world, not just who you are behind closed doors.

And because Venus rules both your relationship houses, your self-worth and your partnerships are directly connected. When you value yourself, you choose better partners. When you don't, you accept less. This is the single most important lever in your love life, and I'll come back to it in your questions.

The kind of partner who brings out your best is someone secure, present, and honest, someone who can meet your depth without being frightened by it and without playing games with it. The kind who depletes you is the intense-but-unavailable type, the one who keeps you guessing. That person feeds the Mars square, not the Venus-Moon trine.

How You Fight For What You Want

Your Mars is in Aquarius in the 1st house, right in your body and your presence. Mars in the 1st gives you more fight and initiative than your gentle Pisces Moon might suggest. You have drive. You can be direct and assertive when it matters. Mars in Aquarius pursues things its own way, on its own terms, with a streak of independence that doesn't like being told what to do.

You need autonomy. You push back against anything that feels like control. Mars makes two tight, helpful sextiles, one to Saturn and one to Mercury. The Saturn sextile gives your drive staying power; you can work steadily toward a goal rather than burning out in a sprint. The Mercury sextile links your action to your thinking, so you tend to act on your ideas.

These are good aspects. They mean your will and your mind cooperate, and your efforts tend to build. The Mars-Venus square is the complication again, now from the drive side. Your independent, autonomous Mars in the 1st can clash with your Venus desire for deep union. Part of you wants to merge completely; part of you guards your freedom fiercely.

In relationships this can look like pulling someone close and then needing space, back and forth. Naming the pattern is most of the cure. You need a partner who understands that your independence and your devotion are both real and not in competition. What energizes you is autonomy and a cause worth caring about. What drains you is feeling controlled or hemmed in.

To avoid frustration, you need room to move your own way, and work or love that lets you be independent while still connected. The Aquarian Mars doesn't do well in a cage, however gilded.

For Love

Your partnership house begins in Gemini, and its ruler is Mercury, sitting in Sagittarius in the 11th house of friendship and community. This is a telling chain. Gemini on your relationship house says you want a partner who is also a friend, someone to talk with, laugh with, think alongside.

Mercury ruling that house from the 11th house of friendship doubles the message: your best partnerships begin as, or always contain, genuine friendship. You're not built for love that has no conversation in it.

Chasing that ruler further, Mercury in Sagittarius wants a partner who shares your search for meaning, someone with their own convictions and curiosity, someone who can grow and explore with you.

The 11th-house placement also hints that partnership may genuinely arrive through your wider circle, through friends, community, shared interests and causes, rather than through forced romantic settings. The Venus-Mars square shapes partnership directly, as we've seen, by drawing you toward exciting instability when what you actually need is warm steadiness.

And your Moon's condition shapes your attachment. Pisces Moon in the security house means you need to feel emotionally safe to open fully, and that safety is tied to feeling secure in general, including materially. When your life feels unstable, your attachment system gets anxious, and anxious attachment tends to pick exactly the wrong people.

When you feel grounded, you choose from your Venus-Moon trine instead, and that's where your real soulmate lives. The honest pattern I see repeating: you're drawn to depth and intensity, which is right, but you've sometimes mistaken drama for depth. The unavailable, hot-and-cold partner feels intense, so it reads as the real thing. It isn't.

Your actual match is someone who offers the depth without the chaos, the intimacy without the games. That person may feel almost too calm at first. Give them a chance anyway.

For Work

Your Midheaven, the peak of your chart and your public identity, is in Libra, ruled by Venus in Scorpio in the 10th house. This is unusually tidy: your career ruler sits right in your career house. Libra on the Midheaven suggests a public role connected to relationships, fairness, beauty, harmony, or working directly with people.

With Venus as the ruler sitting in the 10th in Scorpio, there's real intensity and depth to how you work. You bring emotional honesty and a one-on-one depth to whatever you do professionally. You're not a surface-level, keep-it-light professional. You go deep with people in your work too.

Because Venus also rules your relationship and self-worth houses, your work, your worth, and your relationships are all wired to the same planet. When one lifts, they all lift. When your self-worth is strong, your career and your love life both benefit. This is worth knowing: investing in your own sense of value is not vanity for you, it's the master switch.

Jupiter, your chart ruler, sits in the 8th house, which connects your professional expansion to shared resources, other people's money, intimacy, and transformation. Opportunity comes to you through partnership and through deep, trust-based work, not through going it alone.

Saturn isn't in your 10th or ruling your Midheaven, so the career path isn't primarily a Saturn grind, but Saturn in your 3rd house does ask you to build real skill and communicate it steadily over time. Real success for you, given this chart, isn't fame or a big public platform.

It's meaningful work with people, where your depth and honesty are valued, where you're respected for who you actually are, and where the work connects to something that matters to you. A Libra Midheaven ruled by a 10th-house Venus wants to be admired for its integrity and warmth, not just its output.

For Money

Your money house begins in Aquarius, and its ruler is Saturn in Aries in the 3rd house. Aquarius on the money house gives you an unconventional, sometimes irregular relationship with income; money may come in non-standard ways, in waves rather than a steady salaried trickle.

Saturn ruling that house from the 3rd, and in its sign of fall, is the honest heart of your money question. Saturn in fall doesn't mean doom. It means money has required effort, patience, and maturing, and that there may have been real lessons around scarcity and security earlier in life.

This is the "unlucky" feeling you named, and it's an old pattern, not a permanent sentence. Your Moon sits in this same money house, in Pisces, which is the deepest key. Your emotional life and your financial life are fused. When you feel insecure emotionally, money anxiety spikes, and vice versa.

The Moon-Venus trine is genuinely good news here, because it links your security house to Venus, your most benefic planet, suggesting that warmth, relationships, and valuing yourself all support your material stability.

Saturn ruling the house from the 3rd house of skills and communication points to where the money actually gets built: through your own voice, your skills, your learning, your day-to-day work and words.

The honest observation: your relationship with money has been marked by conservatism and some scarcity-anxiety, understandable given Saturn's condition and its rule over that house. But things genuinely are improving, as you said, and the chart agrees, which I'll detail in your money question.

The lever is Saturn maturing, which happens with age, and it's happening for you now, right on schedule.

For Home

Your roots-and-home house begins in Aries, ruled by Mars in Aquarius in the 1st house, and it holds your North Node, the single most pointed growth signal in your chart. Aries on the home house wants home to feel like your own territory, a place of independence and self-direction.

Mars ruling it from the 1st house ties your sense of home directly to your sense of self: you build home by building yourself. The North Node in your 4th house of home and roots, in near-exact aspect to your Ascendant, is the most defining feature of your entire chart.

Your growth direction is away from the Libra/10th-house pull of defining yourself through relationships, approval, and public standing, and toward the Aries/4th-house work of building your own inner foundation, your own home base, your own self-rooted security. This is enormous for your love question.

The chart is telling you that your soulmate arrives not when you chase a partner to complete you, but when you build your own foundation first. The relationship you want grows out of the self-rootedness you develop, not instead of it.

What you may be building now that you didn't fully receive as a child is exactly this: a sense of secure home that comes from inside you rather than from others.

Saturn's difficult condition and the North Node in the roots house both point to a foundation that had gaps, and to your life's work being the quiet, satisfying job of building that foundation for yourself, finally, on your own terms.

Your North Node in the home sector, almost exactly tied to your rising sign, says your soulmate arrives through self-rooting, not through searching. Build the home inside you first.

YOUR QUESTIONS

What Your Chart Says

Question 1: How do I find my true soulmate? I've been quite unlucky with my love life

I'm answering this from three places in your chart: your Venus in Scorpio in the 10th house with its near-exact trine to the Moon and its square to Mars; your 7th house ruled by Mercury in the 11th house of friendship; and your North Node in the 4th house, almost exactly aligned with your rising sign. First, the honest part.

Your love life hasn't been unlucky so much as patterned. The Venus-Mars square in your chart pulls you toward intensity that masquerades as depth. You're wired for profound connection, Venus in Scorpio demands it, but that same wiring can mistake the anxious thrill of a hot-and-cold partner for real love.

The unavailable ones feel intense, and intensity reads as significance to you. It isn't. What you've experienced as bad luck is largely this: choosing from the Mars square rather than from the Venus-Moon trine. So how do you find the real one?

The chart answer is clear and it's a little counterintuitive. Your North Node in the 4th house, tied almost exactly to your Ascendant, says your soulmate arrives through self-rooting, not through searching harder.

The more you build your own foundation, your own secure home base inside yourself, the more your choosing shifts from the anxious Mars pattern to the grounded Venus-Moon one. When you feel settled in yourself, you stop being drawn to people who keep you guessing, and you start being able to actually see the steady, warm, available person when they show up.

Practically, your 7th house ruled by Mercury in the 11th house of friendship tells you where to look: through friendship, shared community, conversation, common interests. Your real match begins as a genuine friend, someone you can talk to and laugh with, not a stranger across a room who gives you butterflies of uncertainty. Gemini on your partnership house underlines this.

Love that has conversation and friendship in it lasts; love that's all intensity and no friendship burns out. The timing is also kind to you right now. Venus, your love ruler, is moving in review through your chart this October, which is a period for reviewing your own patterns in love rather than rushing forward.

The Sun-Venus cazimi on October 23rd is a genuine reset point for how you value yourself in love. Use this stretch not to go hunting, but to get honest about the pattern and to strengthen your own foundation. The chart says the soulmate follows the self-rooting.

You haven't been unlucky in love. You've been choosing from the Venus-Mars square. Your real match is waiting on the other side of your own self-rootedness.

Question 2: What kind of partner is my best fit for long lasting love?

I'm answering this from your 7th house in Gemini ruled by Mercury in Sagittarius in the 11th, from Venus in Scorpio and its trine to your Pisces Moon, and from your Mars in Aquarius in the 1st. Your best-fit partner is, first and foremost, a friend.

Gemini on your partnership house and Mercury ruling it from the house of friendship say this in stereo: you need someone you can talk to endlessly, who engages your mind, who makes you laugh, who feels like a companion and not just a lover. If the conversation isn't good, the relationship won't last for you, no matter how strong the initial pull.

Second, they need depth to match yours. Your Venus in Scorpio and your Pisces Moon mean you feel and love intensely, and you need someone who can meet that without flinching and without exploiting it. A partner who keeps things light and surface-level will leave you starving. But, and this is the crucial pairing, they must offer that depth with steadiness, not drama.

The right person for you combines Scorpio depth with genuine reliability. They can go all the way down with you emotionally and still be the kind of person who shows up when they say they will. Third, they must respect your independence. Your Mars in Aquarius in the 1st house needs autonomy.

The ideal partner doesn't try to possess or control you; they understand that your freedom and your devotion coexist. Someone who gives you room to be your own person, who has their own life and interests, who meets you as an equal rather than clinging or dominating.

The Aquarian note means an unconventional, open-minded partner suits you better than a traditional, rule-bound one. Fourth, and this draws on your Sagittarius Sun and Rising: they should share your search for meaning. Your ideal partner has their own convictions, their own curiosity about the big questions, their own appetite for growth.

Someone static or purely practical won't satisfy the seeker in you. So the composite picture: a warm, honest, independent-minded friend who shares your hunger for meaning, who can meet your emotional depth without games, and who is reliably present. The steady depth is the key phrase. Not the exciting unavailable one. Not the possessive intense one.

The one who is both deep and safe. Because of your Venus-Moon trine, when you choose this kind of person, your whole emotional life flows; because of the Venus-Mars square, you'll have to consciously choose them over the more dramatic option that tempts you.

Question 3: I am a little bit tight on money although my situation is improving. Do I have indications for upcoming wealth and an improved situation with money?

I'm answering this from your money house in Aquarius ruled by Saturn in Aries in the 3rd house and in its sign of fall; from your Pisces Moon in that same money house and its trine to Venus; and from Jupiter, your chart ruler, in the 8th house, with the current transits moving through your money sector.

Yes, there are real indications of improvement, and they match what you're already sensing. Let me ground it. Saturn, the ruler of your money house, sits in its difficult sign, which is the astrological signature of exactly what you described: money has been tight, effortful, and marked by some scarcity anxiety, especially earlier in life. This is not a permanent condition.

Saturn's gift is that it rewards patience and maturing, and the thing about Saturn money patterns is that they genuinely improve with age and accumulated skill. You are now at the age where that improvement arrives. Your second Saturn return completed earlier this year, in April, which is a major maturation marker.

You've crossed a threshold into greater financial steadiness, and the chart says this is structural, not luck. Where does the money actually build?

Saturn rules your money house from the 3rd house of skills, communication, and daily work. That's your source: your own voice, your own skills, your learning, the steady accumulation of competence that turns into income. Money comes to you through developing and communicating what you know, not through windfalls.

Jupiter, your chart ruler in the 8th house, adds another channel: shared resources, partnership, and other people's money. Financial expansion for you often comes through joining forces, through deep trust-based ventures, through what you build with others rather than alone. The current sky is directly active in your money sector.

Pluto has been moving through your 1st house and stations forward on October 15th, which is a long-term, deep rebuilding of your sense of self and personal power, and that reclaimed sense of worth feeds directly into your earning, because your Moon-Venus trine links self-worth to resources.

Looking a little further ahead, Pluto crosses into your 2nd money house itself in early 2027, beginning a multi-year transformation of your entire relationship with money and security. That's a profound rebuild, the kind that changes the foundation rather than just the balance.

And the solar eclipse in your money house on February 6th, 2027 marks a genuine fresh start in this area. The honest, practical read: you won't get rich from a lottery ticket, that's not your chart. But you will build genuine, lasting financial stability through your skills, your voice, and your partnerships, and that build is underway right now.

The improvement you feel is real and the chart confirms it's structural. The most important thing you can do is keep strengthening your own sense of worth, because for you, self-worth and net worth run on the same wire. The money steadies as you steady.

ACT THREE

Where You're Going

Jupiter — Where Life Expands

Jupiter is your chart ruler, so where it sits is where your whole life wants to grow. In Virgo in the 8th house, your expansion comes through depth: through intimacy, shared resources, joint ventures, and transformation. You grow by merging, by trusting, by going into the deep water with another person or a shared project rather than staying safe on your own shore.

Jupiter in its challenging sign asks that this growth be practical and of-service rather than showy; you expand by being genuinely useful and by mastering the details. The Jupiter-Mercury square means you'll always have to manage the tension between big faith and small analysis, letting the faith lead.

Jupiter's blessing for you is that the deeper you're willing to go with people and ventures, the more life opens up.

Saturn — The Mastery Path

Saturn sits in Aries in your 3rd house of mind, voice, and skills, in its sign of fall, and it rules your money house. This is your mastery path, and it's not a punishment, it's the place you earn real authority through effort. Saturn in the 3rd means your maturity comes through developing your communication, your skills, your steady day-to-day competence.

Earlier in life this may have felt like a struggle, like your voice or your confidence didn't come easily. That's Saturn's way: it withholds early so you build something that actually lasts. Your second Saturn return completed this past April, a major coming-of-age at the deeper level, and you're now in the harvest phase of that long work.

Saturn's tight, helpful sextile to your Mars gives your discipline staying power; your efforts compound rather than fizzle. The mastery you're growing is the ability to trust and communicate your own skill, and to turn it into security.

Where You Heal

Chiron sits in Pisces in your 3rd house, close to Saturn's domain, and it squares your Ascendant. This points to an old tender spot around your voice and self-expression, a sense somewhere along the way that what you had to say wasn't quite welcome or valued, which can make speaking your truth feel vulnerable.

The healing comes exactly through doing the thing that feels tender: communicating, expressing, letting your voice out. The Neptune-Chiron trine in your chart, the single tightest aspect you carry, softens this, lending compassion and imagination to your healing.

As you learn to value and speak your own perceptions, the old wound becomes a source of genuine empathy and wisdom for others.

Your Growth Direction

Your North Node in Aries in the 4th house, South Node in Libra in the 10th, is the clearest growth instruction in your chart, and it speaks directly to your questions. Your comfortable, overused pattern is the Libra/10th-house habit of defining yourself through relationships, approval, partnership, and how you're seen by others.

Your growth is toward the Aries/4th-house work of building your own inner foundation, your own self-rooted home, your own independent sense of self. Here's the behavioral swap: when you catch yourself seeking your sense of worth or completion through a partner or through others' approval, practice turning inward and asking what you need to build for yourself instead.

When you notice yourself shaping who you are around what someone else wants, come back to your own ground. The paradox, and it's a beautiful one for your love question, is that the more you root in yourself, the better your relationships become.

The transiting nodal axis is currently moving through your 2nd and 8th houses, emphasizing this very theme of building your own resources and worth as the foundation for everything else.

Your growth isn't found in a partner completing you. It's found in building your own foundation so solid that love becomes a choice, not a rescue.

THE THREADS THAT CONNECT IT ALL

Key Aspects And Patterns

A few structural patterns tie your whole chart together. The first is your Virgo stellium: Jupiter, Pluto, and Uranus all clustered in Virgo across your 8th and 9th houses. This is a concentration of transformational, depth-seeking, truth-digging energy in the part of your chart that governs intimacy, shared resources, and higher meaning.

It means you were built to go deep, to transform, to dig beneath the surface of things, and it reinforces everything the 8th-house Jupiter says about your life running on depth rather than surface. The second thread, already central but worth naming once more as structure, is the near-exact Neptune-Chiron trine, the single tightest aspect in your chart.

This lends a quiet, imaginative, compassionate undercurrent to your whole nature, a capacity to feel into others' pain and to heal through empathy and imagination. The third is the web of connections around Venus. Venus trines your Moon, rules your Midheaven, your relationship house, your self-worth house, and your creativity house.

Venus is doing enormous work in your chart, which is why self-worth is the master switch I keep returning to. When Venus is well-tended, your love, work, worth, and creativity all flourish together. On balance of elements, your chart runs dominant in Mutable energy by a wide margin, with Earth the weakest.

In plain terms: you are endlessly adaptable, flexible, able to shift and respond, which is a gift, but you can struggle with staying grounded, following through on the practical, and holding steady ground. The weak Earth isn't a flaw; it's a skill to develop deliberately.

Your Pisces Moon and Virgo stellium both help here, giving you access to groundedness when you consciously reach for it. Building Earth, through routine, through the body, through practical follow-through, is part of the same self-rooting work your North Node asks of you.

YOUR CURRENT SKY

What's Happening Right Now

What's Happening Around You Right Now The next six to eight weeks are, fittingly, dominated by your love life and your sense of self-worth, the exact themes you wrote to me about. Venus, your relationship ruler, is moving in review this October, turning your attention inward to your own patterns in love before anything new can take root. Alongside it, Pluto's long passage through your 1st house is reaching a turning point, and the Sun is crossing your Midheaven zone, lighting up how you're seen. The through-line is clear: this is a season for reclaiming your own worth from the inside.

The New Moon in Your 9th House (October 10th)

New Moons are seeds. This one invites you to set a fresh intention around your philosophy of life and your search for truth, which is deeply you given your Sagittarian core. It's a quiet beginning, a good moment to ask what larger meaning you want the next chapter to hold. On the same day, Venus and Mars form their exact square, that signature tension in your chart between closeness and independence, now mirrored in the sky. You may feel the pull-push in a relationship or within yourself. Name it for what it is and don't act impulsively on the friction.

Pluto Stations Direct in Your 1st House (October 15th)

On October 15th Pluto pauses and turns forward in your 1st house of self and identity. Pluto in your 1st is a years-long, deep rebuilding of who you are at the core, a slow shedding of old versions of yourself and a reclaiming of personal power. The station is a release point, where pressure that's been building internally begins to move forward again.

You may feel a subtle but real sense of something unlocking in how you hold yourself. This transformation of self is the foundation under everything else, including your love and money questions, because a stronger, more self-possessed you chooses better and earns better.

The Sun and Venus Cazimi in Your 10th House (October 23rd)

On October 23rd the Sun meets Venus in a cazimi, a single concentrated, clarifying day, in your 10th house where your natal Venus lives. Because this contacts your natal Venus and trines your

Moon, it's a genuine reset for how you value yourself, in love and in your public life both. Think of it as a clean page for self-worth. Whatever you've been reviewing about your patterns in love during Venus's backward motion comes to a point of clarity here. Set an intention around valuing yourself honestly. This is one of the more personally significant days of your autumn.

Mercury Retrograde in Your 10th and 11th Houses (from October 24th)

On October 24th Mercury turns to move in review, in Scorpio, crossing between your 10th and 11th houses. For roughly three weeks, until it turns forward again on November 13th, this is a time to review rather than launch, especially around career, communication, and your networks. Expect some crossed wires and revisited conversations. It pairs with the Venus review nicely: the whole stretch is designed for reflection, not for pushing forward. Be patient with delays and double-check important messages.

The Full Moon Across Your Home and Career Axis (October 26th)

On October 26th a Full Moon in Taurus falls in your 4th house of home and roots, with the Sun opposite in your 10th house of career and public life. Full Moons bring things to culmination and ask for balance across an axis. This one lights up the exact tension your North Node describes: home and inner foundation on one side, public role and visibility on the other.

Something around the balance between your private life and your outer life may come to a head or a clarity. Given your North Node is in this very home sector, pay attention to what this Full Moon shows you about where your real foundation needs tending.

The Year From Here

Looking further out, the slow planets map a meaningful year ahead, and it centers on exactly the themes of your questions. Pluto spends the rest of this autumn finishing its long passage through your 1st house of self, then crosses into your 2nd house of money and self-worth on January 31st, 2027. This is significant.

It begins a multi-year, deep transformation of your entire relationship with money, security, and what you value, the very area you asked about. The old scarcity patterns get rebuilt from the ground up over the coming years. Saturn continues through your 3rd house of skills and voice until May 1st, 2027, when it crosses into your 4th house of home and roots.

That 3rd-house passage is your skill-building and voice-strengthening phase, the foundation of the money improvement we discussed; when Saturn then enters your 4th in May, it begins a period of building real, lasting foundations in your home and inner life, which is the literal construction of what your North Node has been asking for.

Uranus continues moving through your 5th house of romance, creativity, and joy throughout this window, not crossing into your 6th until June 28th, 2027. This is worth knowing for your love question: your 5th house of romance is being shaken awake and refreshed by Uranus, which can bring unexpected, unconventional sparks and a genuine opening in your romantic and creative life.

Neptune and Chiron both continue their long work in your 3rd and 4th houses respectively through the whole year, deepening the healing around your voice and your foundation. And the solar eclipse in your 2nd money house on February 6th, 2027 marks a clear fresh start in your financial life, reinforcing the Pluto shift into that same house.

Taken together, the year ahead builds your foundation, your worth, and your resources, which is precisely the groundwork your soulmate and your financial stability both grow from.

The Window That Matters Most

The single most important window in the next weeks is October 15th through 23rd: Pluto turning forward in your 1st house, then the Sun-Venus cazimi in your 10th. Use this stretch to consciously reclaim your sense of worth. Don't go hunting for a partner or chasing a financial fix. Instead, sit with the honest question of how you value yourself, and let that reset. Everything you asked about, love and money both, grows from the strength of that foundation, and this is the window the sky has handed you to rebuild it.

WHAT TO REMEMBER

Your Core Strengths And Growth Edges

Your first great strength is the depth you bring to everything. Jupiter, your chart ruler, in the 8th house, plus a Virgo stellium and Venus in Scorpio, mean you were built to go all the way down, to love fully, to transform, to connect beyond the surface. In a world of shallow connection, your capacity for depth is rare and valuable. Your second strength is your heart.

The near-exact trine between your Moon in Pisces and Venus in Scorpio gives you genuine emotional warmth and a capacity for devoted, feeling love that flows naturally when you feel safe. You care deeply and people feel it. Your third strength is your adaptability and your reach for meaning.

Your dominant Mutable energy and your Sagittarian core make you flexible, open, searching, and wise in the way people become wise when they've kept asking the real questions. Your main growth edge is the Venus-Mars square and its tendency to pull you toward intense instability in love rather than steady depth.

Learning to choose the warm, available, friendly partner over the exciting unavailable one is the work of your love life. And your second edge, tied to the weak Earth in your chart and your North Node in the home sector, is grounding: building your own foundation, your own self-rooted security, rather than seeking it through others' approval or a partner's love.

When in doubt, build your own foundation first and let love and money grow from the ground you've made solid.

WHAT TO DO NEXT

Five Concrete Steps

Because your Venus-Mars square draws you toward intense, hot-and-cold partners that feel like depth but aren't, make yourself one honest list of the three qualities your best-fit partner actually has: a genuine friend, deep but steady, and respectful of your independence.

Keep it where you can see it, and the next time someone gives you anxious butterflies, check them against the list before you let the pattern take over. Because your North Node sits in your 4th house of home and roots, and Saturn crosses into that house in May 2027, start building your own foundation now, concretely.

Make your living space genuinely yours this autumn, establish one steady home routine, create a sense of rooted security that doesn't depend on anyone else. This is the literal groundwork your chart says your soulmate grows out of.

Because your Pisces Moon sits in your money house and fuses your emotional and financial security, build a daily nervous-system practice that steadies you, something simple like a short morning grounding ritual. When your inner world is calm, your money anxiety eases and your choices improve, both in love and in resources, since for you they run on the same wire.

Because your Mercury in Sagittarius rules your relationship house from the house of friendship, and your real match begins as a friend, invest in your wider community and shared-interest circles rather than forced romantic settings. Join the group, take the class, say yes to the gathering.

Your partnership is likelier to arrive through genuine friendship than through a stranger across a room. Because your North Node asks you to move from Libra-approval toward Aries-self-rootedness, practice one small act of self-direction each week where you choose what you want without checking it against others' approval.

Start writing down your first gut answer before you analyze, since your Pisces Moon's first read is usually the wise one, and trust it. This is how you build the self-trust your whole chart is growing toward.

A FINAL WORD

What Your Chart Is Really Saying

Claire, you came to me asking how to find your true soulmate, what kind of partner truly fits you for lasting love, and whether your money situation is genuinely improving. Here is the chart's answer, clearly.

On love: you haven't been unlucky. You've been caught in the Venus-Mars square, choosing the intense-but-unavailable partner because intensity feels like depth.

Your real soulmate is a warm, honest, independent-minded friend who can meet your Scorpio-Pisces depth with steadiness instead of games, and who shares your hunger for meaning. And your North Node, tied almost exactly to your rising sign, says that person arrives through self-rooting, not through searching harder. Build your own foundation and your choosing changes.

On money: yes, the improvement is real and it's structural, not luck. Your second Saturn return completed this past April, marking a genuine coming-of-age in financial maturity, and Pluto moves into your money house in early 2027 to rebuild your whole relationship with security from the ground up. The money builds through your own voice and skills, and through partnership.

Self-worth and net worth run on the same wire for you, so tend the worth and the wealth follows. The single thread under all of it is this: your chart runs on depth, and your growth lies in rooting that depth in yourself first. The Jupiter in the 8th, the Venus-Moon trine, the North Node in your home sector, they all say the same thing.

Everything you want, the love and the stability both, grows from the foundation you build inside yourself. The recent unlucky feeling was real, but it was weather, not climate. The climate is shifting in your favor right now. This is a map, not a prison. You get to walk it your own way.
